

Quiznos Latest Move Addressing Animal Welfare: Cage-Free Eggs

The Humane Society of the United States Welcomes QSR Chain's Progress

Denver, CO (Jan. 7, 2016) – Quiznos, one of North America's premier quick-service restaurant chains and pioneer of the toasted sub, today announced plans to phase in the exclusive use of cage-free eggs throughout its supply chain. Under its new plan, Quiznos plans to complete the transition to 100 percent cage-free eggs by 2025, with a goal of reaching that objective by 2022.

“Quiznos has been actively engaged in animal welfare initiatives for nearly a decade, and we're pleased to announce this latest phase in that effort,” said Elizabeth Sapp, Quiznos SVP of Communications. “Switching to cage-free eggs is the right thing for our company, customers and of course the animals.”

Quiznos move supports the current industry trend of shifting to cage-free egg products, an initiative McDonald's, Burger King, Wendy's, Costco, and dozens more are also supporting.

Matthew Prescott, HSUS senior food policy director, said, “Quiznos has been a real leader in animal welfare for years. We welcome this newest step in Quiznos quest to improve conditions on our nation's farms.”
